University of Pennsylvania Criminologists Receive NIMH Grant

The University of Pennsylvania has recently received a large grant from NIMH for conducting a 3-year research project concerned with an age cohort analysis of delinquency. Using school files from Philadelphia, Drs. Sellin and Wolfgang and their research staff will attempt to provide delinquency rates for an entire cohort of males all born in 1945 and will trace their names through the master record file of the Juvenile Aid Division in that city. It is assumed that such a rate will present a more accurate and valid indication of the amount of delinquency than use of single calendar years. In effect, a cohort analysis will provide an answer to the question: What proportion of juveniles who are exposed in the community to the juvenile court age limits (in Pennsylvania 7-17) ever become delinquent? Moreover, using the system of weighting of offenses derived from the measurement of delinquency, Drs. Sellin and Wolfgang will attempt to provide a mathematical assessment of the relative degrees of seriousness of offenses committed by juveniles in the cohort. Prediction profiles based upon the time interval between offenses and the changing patterns of delinquency by age will constitute additional aspects of the cohort study.

Membership Directory Coming

If present plans materialize, a complete membership directory will be published early in 1964. Postal cards are being sent to each member in good standing to request basic identifying information. Prompt return of the postage-free card should facilitate compilation of the document.

Writers Needed

Can you write? Then there is a place for you on the staff of Criminologica. Particularly needed are persons who will volunteer to review books, or digest pertinent literature in the periodicals.
