The American Society of Criminology embodies the following objectives:

1. To bring together, in one multidisciplinary society, persons actively engaged in research teaching, and/or practice in the field of criminology.
2. To foster criminological scholarship, research, education, and training within academic institutions and within the divisions of the criminal justice system, including public and private agencies concerned with crime, justice, and corrections.
3. To encourage scholarly, scientific, and practical exchange and cooperation among those engaged in criminology.
4. To serve as a forum for the dissemination of criminological knowledge.

Some Highlights in an Exceptional Program

By

Michael Tonry, Ross Macmillan and Candace Kruttschnitt,
University of Minnesota

The program for the 2007 Annual Meeting of the American Society of Criminology promises to be one of the most intellectually stimulating conferences of the new millennium. With the theme of “Crime and justice: In the global and in the local,” the conference participants are pushing the boundaries of traditional criminological work to explore its influence for the wide array of crime and justice issues that the new era introduces.

To start, this is the largest and most diverse program ever offered by ASC. The number of submissions, including thematic panels, regular paper sessions, roundtables, and posters is higher than any other ASC conference on record. Presenters are coming from all continents and all corners of the globe. Much of the credit for this goes to the efforts of ASC to diversify their membership, as well as the remarkably efficient and internationally diverse members of the program committee. Without their efforts, the program would lack much of its richness and innovation.

Efforts to situate crime and criminal justice in both local and global contexts have produced some particularly exciting panels. Former President and internationally recognized human rights advocate Jimmy Carter will speak on the issue of “Human Rights and Inhuman Wrongs” and discuss both the past and the future of work to improve the safety and security of peoples across the globe. Complementing this, there will be a panel on the past and present of lynchings in America. This will involve renowned expert Woody Beck of the University of Georgia and attorney Andrew Sheldon who has been intimately involved in some of the most high profile civil rights era criminal cases. The Friday plenary will feature a discussion with Glenn Loury and Maria Gottschalk regarding concepts of American justice. Michael Tonry’s Presidential Address will explore the complex relationships between crime and criminal justice that emerge in a world that increasingly links the global and the local. In addition to this, two Presidential Panels will discuss unique issues and implications associated with specific disciplinary approaches to criminological problems. Marie Gottschalk will chair a panel on “Political Science, Crime, and Criminal Justice, while Phil

Cook will offer “Economics, Crime, and Criminal Justice.” For those wishing to expand or hone their methodological toolkits, the ASC, for the second year in a row, is also sponsoring two pre-meeting workshops. One deals with spatial analysis using GIS systems, and the other on casual inference using propensity scores.

While it is not possible to do full justice (no pun intended) to them all, there are hundreds of wonderful regular sessions. For example, members interested in the role that crime and criminologists may play in the upcoming presidential election should attend ““Election Year Crystal Ball Gazing” organized by Laurie Robinson. The relationship between state activities and crime and criminal justice will be further illuminated in more local contexts with “New Theory and Evidence on the Death Penalty” and “The Future of Capital Punishment in the United States” and in the more global context with “International Crimes, State Crime and International Legal Response.” In addition, Todd Clear has organized a number of sessions focusing on public policy issues, ranging from policing and the courts to rehabilitation and re-entry. “What’s Up at NIJ?” with Thomas Feucht is a must for members who wish to better understand the priorities and process of the leading funder of criminological research in the United States. Moreover, for those like us who spend much of our time standing in front of students trying to make lectures more interesting, we would be well rewarded in attending “Criminological Film-making: Teaching and Learning about Justice through Film.”

Finally, no program would be complete without some play to go with the work. For those who like to isolate work and play in time and space, this year’s ASC will continue the tradition of offering wine and cheese during the poster session. The posters are terrific and the wine and cheese will be comparable. For those who like a little distance between their work and play, Ron Akers and his band will entertain on Wednesday and a local Atlanta R & B group will headline the Minority Scholarship Dance. All in all, it promises to be a memorable and stimulating meeting.
