

State University of New York at Geneseo is pleased to have the opportunity to welcome a new colleague to our faculty. Applications for a full-time, tenure The Department of Sociology at the track position at the rank of Assistant Professor to begin September 1, 2025 are invited. We seek candidates with expertise in criminal justice and criminology, with secondary areas in social psychology or public health, who will also be able to contribute to our core curricular needs (introduction, social problems, statistics, methods, theory).

The Sociology Department has a strong tradition of excellent undergraduate teaching, a commitment to broad training in Sociological theory and research, and an understanding of the discipline as committed to fostering critical thinking about social inequalities and the challenges confronting the pursuit of social justice.

The Sociology Department offers a BA in Sociology and maintains strong ties to a variety of interdisciplinary programs across the college, including Legal Studies, Carceral Studies, American Studies, Women's and Gender Studies, Sociomedical Sciences, and Conflict Studies.

Responsibilities of the position include:

- Teaching three courses each semester as assigned by the Department chair;
- Maintaining an active scholarly agenda of research and publication in sociology, preferably involving undergraduate students;
- Contributing to interdisciplinary and co-curricular programs across the college;
- Providing academic advisement to students;
- Mentoring and supervising undergraduate research and professional opportunities;
- Performing active service to the department and the college.

Required Qualifications include:

- Ph.D. in Sociology by August 2025;
- Demonstrated record of excellent undergraduate teaching and inclusive pedagogy;
- Developed research record, demonstrated by success in bringing original research to publication, and a promising research agenda;
- Proficiency with instructional technology and ability to teach in-person and online.

To apply, candidates are required to submit a cover letter, CV, a statement of teaching philosophy, evidence of excellence in teaching, a research agenda statement, a published writing sample, and the names of three references. Cover letters should include descriptions of courses the candidate is prepared to teach. Letters of reference may be requested after the initial screening of candidates. To assure full consideration, please submit materials by January 15, 2025.

Prospective candidates are invited to contact the Search Committee Chair, Bill Lofquist (lofquist@geneseo.edu), with any questions about the position or the application process.
