

INDIANA UNIVERSITY

DEPARTMENT OF CRIMINOLOGY
AND CRIMINAL JUSTICE

College of Arts + Sciences
Bloomington

The Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice at Indiana University, Bloomington, invites applications for a full-time 10-month non-tenure-track position at the level of Lecturer to begin in the fall of 2025. The initial appointment is for three years. Lecturers are then reviewed for annual reappointment until they are considered for promotion to Senior Lecturer and long-term contracts (typically in the sixth year); This position is intended to be long-term; there is a promotion track, through the rank of Senior Lecturer, followed by Teaching Professor. Candidates must have a PhD in hand by the start date of the appointment; current ABDs are welcome to apply. Applicants' degree must be in Criminal Justice, Criminology, or a related field. Applicants with only a law degree (JD, LL.M, SJD) will not be considered.

We seek an individual who is committed to a career of excellence in teaching and engagement with undergraduate students. The teaching load is 3-3. The successful candidate will have the ability to teach criminology and criminal justice classes, such as introduction to criminal justice and criminological theory, and who is a generalist, able to teach a variety of criminology and criminal justice courses across the undergraduate curriculum.

The Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice, housed in the College of Arts & Sciences, has a long and distinguished record of nationally recognized scholarship, teaching, and service, offering degrees at the bachelors, masters, and Ph.D. levels. Its graduate program currently has 22 research active PhD students, and its undergraduate program has around 600 majors. The department is one of the oldest in the country with an established interdisciplinary history.
